How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

During the six-month period ended May 31, 2024, Class A shares of the Fund rose 11.5%, lagging the 16.0% advance registered by the Russell 3000 Index and 16.4% of the S&P 500 Index. As the period unfolded, market advances were led by a handful of mega-cap technology stocks while dividend growth securities failed to keep pace with the frothy market environment. To wit, the NASDAQ Composite Index rose 18% during the period while the NASDAQ Dividend Achievers Index climbed a more muted 11.1%. Widespread optimism surrounding the financial boost that artificial intelligence will provide to technology behemoths propelled that segment of the market higher. More broadly, the equity market continues to benefit from the dual tailwinds of strong economic data and softening inflation figures. At period end, U.S. unemployment of 4.0% remained low relative to historical levels. Core CPI growth moderated to 3.4% in May, well below the 3.9% rate witnessed at period outset in December. Ongoing economic strength has allowed the U.S. Federal Reserve to hold its target rate steady at a range of 5.25% to 5.50% as the monetary strives to push inflation closer to its long-term target rate of two percent. Our stock selection in the Consumer Staples sector of the market bolstered Fund returns while those in the Information Technology sector, despite rising 14% on average, were a drag. Costco (COST, 2.1% of holdings) was a top performing holding, advancing over 40% during the period. The membership based, warehouse retailer has grown earnings by over 15% annually over the past five years, including those marred by the pandemic. A strategy of offering compelling values by focusing on a limited number of SKUs has driven consistent share gains at the retailer. On the downside, Fund holding Starbucks (SBUX, 0.0% of holdings) was the worst performer in the Fund, dipping roughly 26% during the period. In early May, the coffee behemoth posted weaker than expected quarterly results and lowered forward guidance. Comparable store sales in the company's two largest markets, the U.S. and China, both contracted. The recent setback and a murky future under new CEO Laxman Narasimhan drove us to exit the shares in favor of more compelling opportunities.
